

Lab #10

By this point, you should have an outline for your site, some content, and a wireframe. Today, your goal is to author at least 2 HTML documents with textual content. You should then markup the content semantically on an inline and structural level.

Your other goal is to create and append a CSS file to your HTML document, which will highlight individual elements as you hover over them. Each element type or set of types should be highlighted in a different manner (probably using colors). Additionally, make sure the highlight is clear to the eye.

Do not include this CSS file as part of your primary CSS (if you have it), make a separate file instead – however, do remember to place you files into a proper folder.

At least one of your pages should be the home page for your website.
